The University of Kansas

Founded in 1865

Where is Kansas?

Where is the University of Kansas? (KU)

Center for East Asian Studies (CEAS) 1959-

- A National Defense Education Act (NDEA) grant led to the founding of the KU Center for East Asian Area Studies
- CEAS supported curriculum development of East Asian language courses.

East Asian Studies Program

The University of Kansas offers B.A., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees with East Asian content in numerous departments in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences as well as in professional schools.

M.A. degrees in Contemporary East Asian Studies are offered by the Center for East Asian Studies (CEAS). B.A. and M.A. degrees in East Asian languages and literatures are offered through KU's Department of East Asian Languages and Cultures (EALC). B.A. degrees with an East Asian concentration can be earned in other departments, such as History.

East Asian M.A. degrees are offered in Religious Studies. EALC and the Law School share a joint J.D.-M.A. program.

A Ph.D. with an East Asian emphasis can be earned in 9 or more departments (Anthropology, Communications Studies, Economics, Geography, History, History of Art, Political Science, Sociology, and Film and Media Studies) and the School of Education.

"I am using DBpia, E-Korean Studies, KRpia and RISS on a daily basis in my research and teaching. Being informed about recent research trends is crucial for one's own research. I usually search for keywords like "Korean Buddhist Art" or "Korean religions" and/or authors who recently published on Korean Art history and Buddhist Studies. Furthermore, I use DBpia and RISS to learn more about specific topics for my teaching. I also find the online resources provided by E-Korean Studies extremely valuable for my teaching. My graduate students also use these online databases for their research. It is therefore very important for me and my graduate students that KU Libraries continue to have these electronic resources available."

"My research is about Korean history and security issues. For last three years, Korean language databases have been absolutely useful for my studies. For lectures, seminar and reading course, I could not do my research and study without those Korean language databases. ...For Korean studies of KU, Korean language sources are fundamental resources and motivation for next generation of Korean studies scholars of KU."

"I am writing a dissertation about Korean painting of the early Joseon dynasty. I am writing to tell you my appreciation that I can use the Korean language databases at KU library and to say how important it is for me to conduct my dissertation research. DBpia is the most useful and helpful database for me, because I get most of the recently published articles information through this database. Of course, I could download most of the articles at the same time. It is not easy to find and get information about the articles before I use Korean database like Dbpia. It takes lots time and energy. I am so thankful to KU Lib to have Korean databases."

-- PhD candidate, Art History

"I believe the e-Korean Studies and the DBpia and KRpia are indispensable for Korean studies scholars and students. Knowing the studies produced by Korean scholars is not just recommended but absolutely required for the current scholarship in many disciplines."
