Cover Art:

The image of a wind farm in Spearville, KS captures the idea of resilience conveyed in this volume of STAR. In the foreground, a derelict windmill, once used for pumping water vital for agriculture, rests silently in a cemetery—a symbol of a bygone era. But the modern wind turbine used to generate electricity for the area, towering in the background, suggests that communities we assume to be in decline continue to thrive.

Acknowledgements

The editors of Social Thought and Research would like to thank all of the individuals involved in the production of Volume 33: Elizabeth Kanost (copyediting), Melissa Myer (graphics design), and Shane Willson (typesetting) for their help in formatting this volume for publication, as well as the kind donation of the cover photo by J.S. Aber. We also want to thank the graduate students, faculty, and staff in the Department of Sociology at The University of Kansas for their continued support of STAR, including their technical and editorial expertise and advice. We want to thank all of our anonymous reviewers for their time spent reviewing the submissions to this volume. We are indebted to Dr. Wuthnow and Dr. Mooney for their support of STAR. And as always, we thank all the authors who submitted their work for Volume 33 for their patience, diligence, and effort put into drafting and finishing their work for publication.
