Cover Art:

The photograph of the pristine waterfalls of Lake Kahola, Kansas captures the enormity of one of the most urgent questions facing humanity: In the face of rapid anthropogenic changes, can people collectively recalibrate their relationships with ecosystems to ensure a habitable planet? This scenic picture serves as a reminder of the inspiring power of nature and reveals what is at stake if civilizations fail to protect the environments in which they are embedded. In order to expand the reach of applied environmental sociology, the theme of this volume of STAR, the Anthropocene, has been selected.

Acknowledgments

The editors of Social Thought and Research would like to thank all of the individuals involved in the production of Volume 34: Elizabeth Kanost (copyediting), Shane Willson (typesetting), and Jayhawk Ink for their help formatting this volume for publication and printing, as well as the kind donation of the cover photo by Thomas Felts. We also want to thank the graduate students, faculty, and staff in the Department of Sociology at The University of Kansas for their continued support of STAR, including their technical and editorial expertise and advice. We want to thank all of our anonymous reviewers for their time spent reviewing the submissions to this volume. We are indebted to Dr. Stoner for his interview with STAR. And as always, we thank all the authors who submitted their work for Volume 34 for their patience, diligence, and effort put into drafting and finishing their work for publication.
