Teaching kids about organic gardening

Organic teaching gardens sponsored by KU's School of Medicine are an integral part of the science curriculum for students in first, fourth and sixth grades in eight elementary and middle schools in Kansas City, Kan. The students plant, harvest and learn about the nutrition, history and science behind the plants in their garden. The teaching gardens began in 1998 as the brainchild of Marcia Pomeroy, director of the initiative.

Full Story

TODAY'S HEADLINES

KU names director of internal audit

John Curran, city auditor for Olathe, has been named the new director of the Office of Internal Audit at the University of Kansas, Chancellor Bernadette Gray-Little announced today.

Full Story

CAMPUS NEWS

Engineering faculty promoted

Kyle Camarda has been named associate dean of undergraduate programs, and Arvin Agah (pictured at left) has been named associate dean for research and graduate programs for KU's School of Engineering.

Full Story

KUDOS

Professor designs new art books

KU Department of Design faculty member Tim Hossler has designed two books that have received national attention recently: "What Time Is It on the Sun?," by artist Spencer Finch, and "Tim Walker: Story Teller."

Full Story