Searching for a cure far from home

Patients are coming from as far away as New Zealand to participate in a clinical trial at KU Medical Center—a study that is giving new hope to people with a rare genetic condition, Pompe disease, that attacks their muscles. Richard Barohn, chair of the KU Medical Center Department of Neurology, is leading the trial at the KUMC site for adult patients with the condition.

Full Story
KU Sculpture offering demos

KU Sculpture will host three free demonstrations on Saturdays this fall. From working with veneer to MIG welding to basic shop protocol, these demonstrations are for anyone interested in knowing more about making things with their hands.

Full Story