M-2s mentor Salina's next medical students

Enrollment at KU's School of Medicine in Salina recently doubled. There are now 16 students on campus: eight who have just begun their medical education and eight in their second year. Five second-year students made it a point to attend some of the orientation activities for the newcomers. The M-2s, as they're known, had made a decision to be advocates and sources of information for the first-year students.
