Law professor examines jurors' rights

Melanie Wilson, professor and associate dean for academic affairs at KU's School of Law, has authored and presented an article contending that potential jurors are so regularly exposed to privacy-invading, personal questions during voir dire — jury selection — that many are driven to lie or withhold information.

Full Story