Tool identifies online special needs products

KU’s Center on Online Learning and Students with Disabilities has developed a new tool to help schools and others involved in education identify online products that are accessible for students with disabilities. It simplifies the search for a product's Voluntary Product Accessibility Template, which shows its compliance with Section 508 accessibility requirements.

Full Story

TODAY’S HEADLINES

Multicultural affairs director named

Following a nationwide search, KU's Office of Multicultural Affairs has a new director, Blane Harding, who began his new role July 2. Harding joins KU from Colorado State University.

Full Story

KGS scientist will give lecture series

Rick Miller, geophysicist and senior scientist at the Kansas Geological Survey, a research division of KU, has been selected by a prestigious scientific organization to present 25 lectures on his research in 11 countries.

Full Story

CAMPUS NEWS

Alumnus will manage RedTire

Denton Zeeman, a 2012 MBA graduate of KU's School of Business, will serve as program manager of RedTire – also known as the Redefining Retirement program – to coordinate the new endeavor's many elements.

Full Story

KUDOS

May employees of the month

KU's May Employees of the Month come from the KU Center for Research and the Department of Physics and Astronomy.

Full Story
Student will present oil research

A unique approach to recovering oil from tiny cracks in rocks deep below the earth’s surface has earned a KU School of Engineering graduate student a trip to an international conference to showcase her research.

Full Story