Study: Choosing same-sex schools

In the last decade, same-sex schools and classes have increased dramatically across the United States. Meagan Patterson, KU assistant professor of psychology and research in education, has co-authored a study asking why administrators, parents and students choose them, and their perceptions of fairness of same-sex education.

Full Story