Women have been active in the field of folklore for many years. They have collected songs and tales, founded folklore societies and folk festivals, written scholarly articles, pursued creative endeavours using folk motifs, and adapted folk materials for education and recreation. Annabel Morris Buchanan played her part in this tradition. She collected folk songs in the Appalachian region of the United States in the 1930s, founded an annual folk festival and directed it for six years, wrote about folk music, and composed music using folk themes. Though destined by birth to fill the traditional role of a respectable Southern woman, she took off in her own direction and joined the ranks of women in Britain, the USA, and many other countries who were dedicated amateur folk song collectors in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Buchanan excelled in every field in which she participated: she not only functioned as a hostess for her lawyer/politician husband, she also taught music, was a church organist and choir director, composed art songs and hymns, and wrote gardening articles and romantic short stories for women’s magazines. In addition, she was a leader in the National Federation of Music Clubs and organised choral music festivals. These were all acceptable activities for an upper-class, ‘progressive Southern woman’, as one literary journal labelled her. What set her outside the usual woman’s role more than anything else was her work in the field of folklore.

One of Buchanan’s primary motivations in all of her ‘folk work’, as she called it, was her belief that the composers of the elite musical world could improve the quality of their own compositions by using the themes of folk music. Indeed, one of Buchanan’s primary contributions to elite creative expression lay in her own settings of folk tunes for piano and choir, and her compositions using folk themes, most of which were published by J. Fischer between 1929 and 1944. What distinguished her from most other contemporary composers was that in 1930 she joined what she called the ‘most delightful of fraternities, that of the folk-music collector’, which was to change her life in many ways. Her reading of British and American folklore journals and other folklore publications, as well as of books such as National Music by Ralph Vaughan Williams and J. G. Frazer’s The Golden Bough, helped to form her opinions on the value of folk music and on the uses to which it should be put. Her ideas about and knowledge of folklore and traditional song were strongly affected by her contact with British folklorists during the White Top Folk Festival conferences and by letters from correspondents such as Anne Gilchrist. These contacts, as well as the many American folklorists whom she met at the conferences or with whom she corresponded, also influenced her development of a theory of a neutral mode in folk music and her theories about the tune families of folk hymns.5

A fortuitous combination of circumstances in Buchanan’s life helped her to accomplish so much in so many different fields. Her own personal talents, her family background, the southern regions where she grew up and lived all of her adult life, her quick intelligence, her open friendliness, and her willingness to work hard, all provided the background for her accomplishments in folklore, music, and writing. One magazine writer was astounded that ‘one woman has covered so many branches of the arts and specialized in each to so high a degree of professionalism’.6 Some more facts about Buchanan’s life will help us to understand these extraordinary accomplishments. Annie Bell Morris was born in Groesbeck, Texas, in 1888. She showed precocious musical talent, playing piano for her father’s church choir at the age of seven. Her family’s tradition of singing folk hymns and other folk songs was very important to her. As she said in a speech in 1954: ‘among my earliest recollections are the songs and tunes of my parents and grandparents: songs and tunes which, heard in the impressionable years of childhood, have profoundly influenced my life.’7 When Annie Bell was fifteen, she won a scholarship to the Landon Conservatory of Music in Dallas, Texas, from which she graduated three years later with the highest honours. She taught at a women’s college in Abingdon, Virginia, where she met John Preston Buchanan, a lawyer and writer who would later become a state senator. They married and moved to Marion, Virginia, in 1912. Over the space of the next fifteen years, the roles of wife, mother of four, gardener, and church organist seemed to satisfy Annabel (sometimes before her marriage, she had changed the spelling of her name), although she continued with her other creative activities such as composing art songs and writing articles and short stories for women’s magazines.

While preparing a programme for her Marion Monday Afternoon Music Club in 1923, Buchanan read Cecil Sharp’s book English Folk Songs from the Southern Appalachians,8 and was intrigued and inspired. From that time forward, she read all the books she could find on the folk songs of Britain and North America. Her papers include order lists of books she bought from Blackwell’s in Oxford. These provide a fascinating glimpse into her reading on the subjects of folklore and folk music. Buchanan had long been familiar with the music that was played for square dances by some of the men in her town, but it was not until John Powell, a composer and pianist from Richmond, Virginia, came to address her music club in 1930 on the importance of saving America’s so-called ‘native’ music for posterity and using it in composition that she began combing the countryside for folk music. She started collecting in her own neighbourhood but she soon branched out, travelling through

Figure 1 Annabel Morr...
ch it should be put. Her ; were strongly affected
olk Festival conferences
These contacts, as well ferences or with whom ry of a neutral mode in ysns.
han's life helped her personal talents, her up and lived all of her her willingness to work
lore, music, and an has covered so many ree of professionalism.

to understand these
n in Groesbeck, Texas,
her father's church
; folk hymns and other ch in 1954: 'among my nd grandparents, songs
hood, have profoundly m a scholarship to the h she graduated three
's college in Abingdon,
 and writer who would
r, Virginia, in 1912.
other of four, gardener,
e before her marriage,
tuned with her other icles and short stories

day Afternoon Music Songs from the Southern efore, she read all
th America. Her papers xford. These provide lore and folk music.
yed for square dances
well, a composer and ic club in 1930 on the osterity and using it folk music. She started out, travelling through

Figure 1  Annabel Morris Buchanan

the surrounding counties and further into the Appalachian regions of other states, either by herself or with fellow collectors such as Richard Chase.

An open and very friendly woman, Buchanan took advantage of every conceivable situation to collect folk songs. Once, for example, while riding on a bus in the dark, she noted down a play-party game from a fellow passenger. Another time she approached an old man on the street, who 'had a certain look about him', to ask if he knew songs from the Southern Harmony shape-note book; he did. Richard Chase told a story about Buchanan's ability to find folk songs: on one of their collecting jaunts they stopped at the side of a road so that he could change a flat tyre; by the time he had finished, she had noted down three fiddle tunes, a play-party game, and two ballads. While this anecdote might be apocryphal – after all, Chase was an inveterate storyteller – it does illustrate how highly other folklorists and collectors thought of her abilities. Her collecting notebooks and her correspondence with contributors and with other collectors give further fascinating glimpses into her collecting style.

301
Folk Song: Tradition, Revival, and Re-Creation

Buchanan respected the 'mountain folk', as she called her informants, and they respected her. They were willing to give her not only their songs and tunes but their tales, legends, and beliefs. Indeed, some of them trusted her so much, even on short acquaintance, that they were willing to tell her about witchcraft beliefs and charms for healing, which are not matters that people in rural areas are often willing to share with outsiders. During the years 1931 to 1936, she developed another important avenue for making contacts with informants when she became the co-founder and director of the White Top Folk Festival, held on White Top Mountain not far from her home in Virginia. The festival was an odd concatenation of two types of musical event. It was modelled partially on the fiddle contests that had been popular in the area in earlier times and partially on the folk festivals held in Canada in the 1920s, about which Buchanan had read. Contests were held during the day and were open to anyone who wanted to participate - so long as the music was traditional as judged by Buchanan herself and by the judges, whom she chose from elite, not local, culture. The evening concerts featured those performers who were, in Buchanan's estimation, the best the region had to offer in the performance of traditional songs, dances, and instrumental pieces.⁹

Many of Buchanan's most important contributors were people she first met through the festival. It was also the place where she interacted with other folklore collectors, composers, and National Federation of Music Clubs officials, as well as with local, state, and national dignitaries, including first lady Eleanor Roosevelt in 1933. The White Top Festival was a focal point of Buchanan's life in many ways. In fact, at this time and in later years she often spoke of her 'White Top work', by which she meant all of her many activities in folklore.⁸ These are documented in her papers, which were deposited by her family in the Southern Historical Collection at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, in 1978. They include thousands of pages of correspondence with many well-known figures from the worlds of elite music and folklore, and hundreds of tales, legends, customs, sayings, herbal cures, and beliefs, as well as songs and tunes. Buchanan also deposited the songs she collected for the National Federation of Music Clubs' American Music Archive Project in the Archive of Folk Culture at the Library of Congress.¹⁰ I have created a database which includes the following information about each of the 839 songs Buchanan considered worthy of inclusion in her collection: song title, standard title, informant, collector, place, and date, along with any special notes. This database provides the basis for the following analysis of Buchanan's collection.

Of the total number of songs in her collection, Buchanan herself collected 570 and received around 270 from other people. The songs she did not collect herself were sent to her by a total of seventy-four people, thirty-eight of whom were members of the National Federation of Music Clubs and twenty-four of whom were well-known collectors, including Phillips Barry, Austin Fife, Herbert Halpert, William Koch, George Korson, Louise Pound, Anne Warner, and Mary Wheeler. The largest group of songs in this category consists of 128 songs from the manuscript collection of Martha Davis, which were contributed by Davis's sister.
Buchanan solicited songs from other collectors for two purposes: first, to complete her manuscripts, and secondly, to add to her American Music Archive Project for the National Federation of Music Clubs, for which she wanted to use examples of all genres of American folk songs and examples from every state in the USA.

The 570 songs and tunes that Buchanan collected herself were from 170 different contributors. The majority of these people gave her only one or two songs, but forty-seven gave her between three and twelve songs each, and seven – who were all from Marion, Virginia, or surrounding Smyth County – gave her from thirteen to thirty-four songs each. These seven included three who were regular performers at the White Top Folk Festival: singer Horton Barker of Chilhowie; singer, fiddler, and dance-callers Council Cruise of Damascus; and dulcimer player and singer Samuel F. Russell of Marion. Buchanan’s most prolific informant, however, was Elsiebell Ferguson of Marion, from whom she collected thirty-four songs. Many of her contributors were also informants for other collectors, either before or after Buchanan recorded their songs. This gives an interesting perspective on how the songs of individual performers changed over time or between performances. For example, Horton Barker was recorded on paper by Buchanan in 1931 and later recorded on disc by Richard Chase and Arthur Kyle Davis. John M. ‘Sailor Dad’ Hunt was recorded by Buchanan in 1933 and 1934, but also by Arthur Kyle Davis during the same years, as well as by John Lomax in 1935, by the National Folk Festival in 1938, and by Alan Lomax in 1941. These multiple recordings allow scholars to look at the repertoire of a singer to see which songs were sung for which collectors and in what kinds of performance situations.

Sometimes Buchanan’s contributors sang songs for her that they did not sing for other collectors. For instance, there are twelve songs from Horton Barker in Buchanan’s collection that are not in any of the other published or recorded collections. Again, Samuel F. Russell, whom Buchanan recorded before anyone else, gave her sixteen songs that are not in any other published or recorded collections. All collectors, and often performers themselves, are aware that, depending on the situation, the audience, and the way the singer or instrumentalist is feeling at the time, a performer will offer a specific set of songs or tunes. Any recording session is merely a snapshot of the singer’s active repertoire on a particular day or, in some cases, a resurrection of old materials from an inactive repertoire, if that is what the performer believes the collector or the audience wants.

The types of songs Buchanan collected were diverse. Although she was not immune to the ‘look how many Child ballads I found’ syndrome, she did endeavour to collect all the material that came her way – banjo and fiddle tunes, children’s songs, and hymns, in addition to old ballads and lyric songs. She organised her songs into folders using her own classification scheme (Figure 2).
Child ballads
Children's songs
Broadside
Hymns
Humorous songs
Lyric songs Native songs Fiddle tunes with Native ballads War songs Sea songs

Figure 3 Analysis by

Analysing the categories for Child ballads, party games, and ballads, large numbers of hymn tunes were explained by the anecdot. The anthem was by a retired sailor living in a village and placed the copies of her songs by type of choral work. She was one of the first access to mechanical equipment. Indeed, with speed and accuracy, one place in her collection.

Buchanan at the same time, and some information with others where the books were certainly written. About crediting the singer, the collection included the background of the Good Old Rebel and tune recorded o
Child ballads 104 versions of 34 song types
Children's songs 103 versions of 55 song types
Broadsides 55 versions of 41 song types
Hymns 55 versions of 32 song types
Humorous songs 36 songs
Lyric songs 35 versions of 27 song types
Native songs 34 versions of 23 song types
Fiddle tunes with words 23 versions of 13 song types
Native ballads 21 songs
War songs 11 versions of 9 song types
Sea songs 8 songs

Figure 3 Analysis by type of 570 songs collected by Annabel Morris Buchanan

Analysing the collection by song type, the largest number appear in the categories for Child ballads; children's songs, which includes nursery rhymes, play-party games, and lullabies; and broadsides, both British and American; with fairly large numbers of hymns, humorous songs, lyric songs, and native American ballads (Figure 3). The anomaly of sea songs being collected in the mountains of Virginia can be explained by the inclusion of the songs of 'Sailor Dad' Hunt, who was a retired sailor living in Marion.

Buchanan typed copies of the songs she collected using up to ten carbons and placed the copies in more than one folder. This gave her the ability to look up her songs by type of song, as above, or by informant or state. Another impressive aspect of her collection is that 464 out of her 839 songs have tunes accompanying them. She was one of the few American collectors who, even though she had no access to mechanical recording devices, often took down the tunes as well as the words to songs. Indeed, she was quite proud of her ability to note the tunes by hand with speed and accuracy. However, the handwritten tune usually appears in only one place in her files because copying tunes by hand was such a time-consuming process.

Buchanan also included as much information as she could about the song, the singer, and sometimes even the context of the performance, and included this information with the songs in her collection. Because she modelled her collection on others where the main concern was the song, and not the singer or the context, we could certainly wish for more information, but, for her time, she was meticulous about crediting the singer as much as possible. Almost all of the song sheets in her collection include the name and place of residence of the contributor, the name of the collector, the date the song was collected, and notes on the history of the song or the background of the informant. For example, there is a note at the bottom of 'I'm a Good Old Rebel' that tells the circumstances of how it was collected: 'One verse and tune recorded over telephone ... text written by Miss Ball.' Evidently this was a common technique used by Buchanan in collecting songs. Often she would only take the time to note one stanza, the chorus, and the tune while she was with the contributor or talking to them on the telephone, then she would have them send all the words to her later. This allowed her to collect a large number of songs in one day, at the White Top Folk Festival for example, without using a mechanical recording device.

The Gypsy Girl’ is an example of one of many songs that have notes written by Buchanan presenting a history of its appearance in published collections:

From Horton Barker, Tune Mar. 31, 1931.
Words Aug. 27, 1931.

Collected and arranged by Annabel Morris Buchanan

The Gypsy Girl.

1. My father was a captain of a gypsy tribe, you know,
   My mother she gave me some counting to do;
   With a knapsack on my shoulder, I bid you all farewell,
   I'll take a trip to London, some fortunes to tell. ...

This is a version of ‘The Gypsy Girl’, (‘The Little Gypsy Girl’) from English broadside. See Cox, 100, for West Virginia version. Cox also gives these references: Roxburgh Ballads, VIII, ii, 853; De Marsan broadside, List 9, No.

The following version of ‘Omie Wise’ has an even more extensive set of notes on the history of the song, in this case describing the contributor’s knowledge about it and his belief that it was a true story:

From D.A. Hilliard,
Sept. 14, 1931.

Collected and arranged by Annabel Morris Buchanan.

Omie Wise.

1. I'll tell you a story of little Omie Wise,
   Oh, it's how she was deluded by John Lewis' lies. ...

Mr. Hilliard says this really happened in Virginia. Another folk singer, the Rev.
J. L. Sims, who has also given me a version of this ballad, wrote down for me, ‘Omey Wise that was drown by John Lois in the year of 1856 in the state of N.C., Saro Co.’ Lamar Stringfield (30 and 1 Folk Songs, 14) gives a version which he says is a true story: Jonathan Lewis having drowned his sweetheart, Naomi Wise, in Deep River, 1808. Miss Louise Pound (Pound, 51) gives a Kentucky version also found in Campbell & Sharp (No. 70 A,B,C) in which Omie was found ‘In the bottom of Siloty below the mill dam’ and mentions another version from Virginia which once danced with the man might have...

LYN WOLZ

left the meeting place

Journal of American

Stringfield, 30 &...

at Providence Ch...

occurred in this

Virginia, and be...

collected other v

tune, ‘How Firm

Buchanan also in games, and dances t

Sung by Mrs. Elziebell Fe
Marion, Smyth C

1. Green gravel,
   The grass is sc
   And the maso
   Are ashamed

2. Oh, Mary, Oh,
   Your true love
   He wrote you
   To turn back y
   Children form ci
   one from the cin
   head; the one ch joined with the c
   in this manner t
   and boys play. W
   you a letter….
   ‘the masons’ are

The Man that Lived
the standard or alter ancestors and ethnic technique used by Buchanan in collecting songs. Often she would only be to note one stanza, the chorus, and the tune while she was with the or talking to them on the telephone, then she would have them send all or her later. This allowed her to collect a large number of songs in one day.
A Top Folk Festival for example, without using a mechanical recording

e Gypsy Girl' is an example of one of many songs that have notes written in presenting a history of its appearance in published collections:

Horton Barker,
Mar. 31, 1931.
\textit{Collected and arranged by}
Annabel Morris Buchanan
Aug. 27, 1931.

The Gypsy Girl.
The father was a captain of a gypsy tribe, you know,
whose daughter gave me some counting to do;
and as I was not on my shoulders, I bid you all farewell, when we got to London, some fortunes to tell...

A version of 'The Gypsy Girl', ('The Little Gypsy Girl') from English ad. See Cox, 100, for West Virginia version. Cox also gives these sces: Roxborough Ballads, VIII, ii, 855; De Marsan broadside, List 3, No.

ng version of 'Omie Wise' has an even more extensive set of notes on the song, in this case describing the contributor's knowledge about it and what it was a true story:

J.A. Hilliard,
4, 1931.
\textit{Collected and arranged by} Annabel Morris Buchanan.

Omie Wise.

illiam says this really happened in Virginia. Another folk singer, the Rev.
ma, who has also given me a version of this ballad, wrote down for me, Wise that was born by John Less in the year of 1856 in the state of N.C.
't' Lamar Stringfield (30 and 1 Folk Songs, 10) gives a version which he as a true story: Jonathan Lewis having drowned his sweetheart, Naomi in Deep River, 1808. Miss Louise Pound (Pound, 51) gives a Kentucky also found in Campbell & Sharp (No. 70 A,B,C) in which Omie was in the bottom of Siloet below the mill dam' and mentions another

LYN WOLZ. Annabel Morris Buchanan and her folk song collection version from Virginia which came from a man acquainted with Omie Wise, having danced with her after. According to Miss Pound, when this gentleman once sang the song at a singing school in Indiana, a stranger present hastily left the meeting and skipped the country. 'Many people thought perhaps this man might have been the Lewis who murders Omie in the song.' See also Journal of American Folk-Lore, XX, 265-6. Bascom Lamar Lunsford (Lunsford-Stringfield, 30 & 1 Folk Songs) states that he has visited the grave of Omie Wise at Providence Church near Deep River, N.C. So it seems certain that the tragedy occurred in this mountain section, whether in North Carolina or southwestern Virginia, and became the theme of a typical American folk-ballad. I have also collected other versions of this, some with tune almost identical with the hymn

'tune, 'How Firm a Foundation'!

Buchanan also included instructions for many of the children's songs, singing-games, and dances that she collected. 'Green Gravel' is an example:

Sung by
Mrs. Elziebell Ferguson, Marion, Smyth Co., Va.

Recorded by Annabel Morris Buchanan
Sept. 15, 1931.

\textbf{Green Gravel}

1. Green gravel, green gravel,
The grass is so green,
And the masons, the masons
Are ashamed to be seen.

2. Oh, Mary, Oh, Mary,
your true love is dead,
He wrote you a letter,
To turn back your head.

Children form circle, hands joined. A leader has been chosen, who then chooses one from the circle by calling her name in the second verse. At 'turn back your head', the one chosen turns, facing backward, though continuing to circle, hands joined with the others. This player then chooses the next to turn. They continue in this manner until the entire circle has 'turned inside out'. (Sometimes girls and boys play. When a boy's name is called, the seventh line is sung. 'She wrote you a letter ...'; and the boy turns backward in circle.) The alternate words for the masons' are 'the maidens'.

'The Man that Lived in the Woods' provides an example of how Buchanan listed the standard or alternative titles and includes a typical note about the informant's ancestors and ethnic and geographical background.

307
Folk Song: Tradition, Revival, and Re-Creation

Song by Annabel Morris Buchanan

The Man That Lived in the Woods (The Drummer and His Wife) (Father Grumble)

1. There was an old man that lived in the woods,
And this you can plainly see,
He said he could do more work in a day
Than his wife could do in three ...

From his father, of Irish descent, born in Aiken County, South Carolina, later living near Walker's Mountain, north of Marion, southwestern Virginia, where Levi was born. Mr. Sims thought the song had come originally from his grandfather Sims, born near Belfast, Ireland.

Finally, 'The False Knight Upon the Road' gives an example of how Buchanan marked tunes according to the type and mode of the melody, according to her own modal analysis system:

Song by Recorded by Mrs. Maud Gentry Long, Annabel Morris Buchanan
Hot Springs, Madison Co., N.C. Richard Chase
June 26, 1936

Pentatonic Mode 3 The False Knight Upon the Road (Child 5)

1. Where are you going? said the knight in the road,
I'm going to school, said the child as he stood.
He stood and he stood.
I'm going to school.
Said the child as he stood ...

Learned from her mother, Mrs. Jane Gentry of Hot Springs, who sang the ballad for Cecil Sharp in 1916.

One of the most important pieces of information for collectors in Buchanan's era was the state where the informant lived. There even seemed to be a kind of contest as to which state could claim the most Child ballads. Analysing Buchanan's collection by the state of residence of her informants, it turns out that most states are represented by between one and eleven songs. Most of these were sent to Buchanan by other collectors or by National Federation of Music Clubs members. The states with the highest number of songs in her collection are the ones where she did a lot of collecting. The six states with the highest numbers of contributory songs account for 611 out of the 797 songs in the collection that are in particular state (Figure 4).

LYN WOLZ:

Annabel Morris Buchanan and her folk song collection

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>State</th>
<th>Number of Songs</th>
</tr> </thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Virginia</td>
<td>437</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kentucky</td>
<td>70</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tennessee</td>
<td>37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>North Carolina</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Texas</td>
<td>23</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>West Virginia</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr> </tbody>
</table>

Figure 4: The six USA states where Annabel Morris Buchanan collected the most songs.

Another item of interest to scholars is the date when songs were recorded. The dates of collection for songs in Buchanan's papers range from 1911 to 1933. All of those collected between 1911 and 1933 are from the Martha Davis collection. Buchanan herself collected songs from the early 20th century, although most were collected between 1930 and 1940, the years when she worked in her own area, took many collecting trips, and ran the White Festival. Most of the songs dated between 1941 and 1949 were sent to her by collectors. Those dated 1950 were mostly gathered by Buchanan when she took collecting trips. Finally, half the songs dated 1951 to 1960 were collected by her and the other half were sent to her by National Federation of Music Clubs and by other collectors.

Annabel Morris Buchanan's collection of folk songs is substantial and would prove interesting to anyone who wants to study a cross-section of novels, songs sung among white people in the Appalachian region, especially western Virginia, in the 1930s. However, extensive as her accomplishment - her large folk song collection, her musical compositions, her writing, her work with the White Top Folk Festival, among many others - she suffered a disappointment in her life. She had long worked towards the goal of collecting folk songs published as a multi-volume work with music and accompanying texts, but she was never able to find the money to publish it. Her work has never been easy to access and remains hard to find in print. Although she is not one of the more well-known figures in America's folk song history, she was an ardent advocate of saving folk music through its use in everyday life, and her influence can be felt in many people's views on the value of the American folk song tradition.

I wish to thank the University of Kansas for financial support from the Staff Development, the Library Research Fund, and the General Research Fund.
Folk Song: Tradition, Revival, and Re-Creation

Recorded by Annabel Morris Buchanan
Oct. 8, 1931

The Man That Lived in the Woods
(The Drummer and His Wife)
(Father Grumble)

was an old man that lived in the woods, nd this you can plainly see,
said he could do more work in a day
than his wife could do in three ...

His father, of Irish descent, born in Aiken County, South Carolina, later near Walker's Mountain, north of Marion, southwestern Virginia,

The False Knight Upon the Road' gives an example of how Buchanan unes according to the type and mode of the melody, according to her own alysis system:

by Maud Gentry Long, Springs, Madison Co., N.C.

Recorded by Annabel Morris Buchanan
Richard Chase
June 26, 1936

The False Knight Upon the Road
3 (Child 3)

'Where are you going?' said the knight in the road,
'I'm going to school,' said the child as he stood,
'the stood and he stood,
'I'm going to school,'
wit the child as he stood ...

The informant was her mother, Mrs. Jane Gentry of Hot Springs, who sang the lass for Cecil Sharp in 1916.

One of the most important pieces of information for collectors in Buchanan's the state where the informant lived. There even seemed to be a kind of is to which state could claim the most Child ballads. Analysing Buchanan's by the state of residence of her informants, it turns out that most states are ed by between one and eleven songs. Most of these were sent to Buchanan
- collectors or by National Federation of Music Clubs members. The states with the highest number of songs in her collection are the ones where she herself did a lot of collecting. The six states with the highest numbers of contributors and songs account for 611 out of the 797 songs in the collection that are credited to a particular state (Figure 4).

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>State</th>
<th>Songs</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr> </thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Virginia</td>
<td>437</td>
<td>(lived there most of her adult life)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kentucky</td>
<td>70</td>
<td>(made three collecting trips)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tennessee</td>
<td>37</td>
<td>(made two collecting trips)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>North Carolina</td>
<td>29</td>
<td>(made two collecting trips)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Texas</td>
<td>23</td>
<td>(from her family tradition)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>West Virginia</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>(from a former resident of Marion, Virginia)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Figure 4 The six USA states where Annabel Morris Buchanan collected most songs

Another item of interest to scholars is the date when songs were collected.
The dates of collection for songs in Buchanan's papers range from 1911 to 1961. Out of the 839 songs, 181 are undated. All of those collected between 1911 and 1922 are from the Martha Davis collection. Buchanan herself collected songs from 1930 to 1961, although most were collected between 1930 and 1940, the years when she worked in her own area, took many collecting trips, and ran the White Top Folk Festival. Most of the songs dated between 1941 and 1949 were sent to her by others. Those dated 1950 were mostly gathered by Buchanan when she took her final collecting trip. Finally, half the songs dated 1950 to 1960 were collected by Buchanan and the other half were sent to her by National Federation of Music Clubs members and by other collectors.

Annabel Morris Buchanan's collection of folk songs is substantial and would prove interesting to anyone who wants to study a cross-section of traditional songs sung among white people in the Appalachian region, especially in southwestern Virginia, in the 1930s. However, extensive as her accomplishments were
- her large folk song collection, her musical compositions, her writing, her founding of the White Top Folk Festival, among many others - she suffered one major disappointment in her life. She had long worked towards the goal of seeing her collection of folk songs published as a multi-volume work with musical settings and scholarly annotations, modelled on the published collections of Sharp, Child, and others. She worked on four major book manuscripts for more than thirty years and tried several times to interest publishers in the projects, but to no avail. Her work has never been easily accessible and remains hard to find to this day.
Although she is not one of the more well-known of America's folk song collectors, she was an ardent advocate of saving folk music through its use in every possible field of culture, and she influenced many people's views on the value of the folk arts.
Most importantly, she left the world a legacy of the American folk songs she loved.

I wish to thank the University of Kansas for financial support from the Staff Development Committee, the Library Research Fund, and the General Research Fund.
Folk Song: Tradition, Revival, and Re-Creation

Select bibliography of published writings by Annabel Morris Buchanan (excluding musical scores, gardening articles, and fiction other than three short stories in the Southern Literary Messenger that use folk themes)

"The Cherry Tree Carol (A Christmas Carol)", Richmond Times-Dispatch, Sunday Magazine, 20 December 1936, p. 3.

"The Creation and Fall of Man: A Kentucky Ballad-Carol", Kentucky Folksong Record, 1 (1959), 91-99.

"Defending the Festival", Richmond Times-Dispatch, 16 May 1934.

"Fiddle or Drum", Southern Literary Messenger (1939), 815-26. (short story)

Folk Hymns of America (New York: Fischer, 1938).

"Hungry Mother", Southern Literary Messenger (1939), 343-46. (short story)

"Snow-in-the-Mountain", Southern Literary Messenger (1939), 393-99, 472-78. (short story)

"Traditional Dances Lure Virginia Back", Richmond Times-Dispatch, 13 December 1936.

Twelve Folk Hymns: From the Old Shape-Note Hymnbooks and from Oral Tradition, with John Powell and Hilton Ruffy (Glen Rock, N.J.: Fischer, 1934).

"With Clouds, Charms Lure White Top's Path", Richmond Times-Dispatch, Sunday Magazine, 2 December 1934, pp. 6-7.

Select bibliography of items relating to Annabel Morris Buchanan and the White Top Folk Festival

(Other articles about the White Top Folk Festival appeared in newspapers in Washington, Atlanta, Detroit, Nashville, St Louis, and New York, among other cities, during the months of July and August from 1932 to 1936 inclusive.)

Beckwith, Martha, "The White Top Folk Festival", Journal of American Folklore, 46 (1933), 416.

Crawford, Bruce, "Folk Music at White Top", New Republic, 30 August 1933, 74-75.

Notes
1 "Real Southerner", Southern Literary Messenger (1939), 404-06.
2 For a description of some of Buchanan's collecting experiences, see her titled "On the Trail of the Folk Song in the Virginia Mountains" (unpublished Annabel Morris Buchanan Collection 4020, Southern Historical Collection, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill) (hereafter cited as AMB 4020).
3 See Annabel Morris Buchanan, 'A Neutral Mode in Anglo-American Southern Folklore Quarterly, 4 (1940), 77-92, for further details of this system.
Folk Song: Tradition, Revival, and Re-Creation

ography of published writings by Annabel Morris Buchanan musical scores, gardening articles, and fiction other than three short stories in the Mary Messenger that use folk themes in Virginia Folkways, "Richmond Times-Dispatch, Sunday Magazine, 24 May 6.

"Old Hymnody", International Cyclopedia of Music and Musicians (New York:
"Old Music", International Cyclopedia of Music and Musicians (New York: Dodd, 39), pp. 602-12.
Tree Carol (A Christmas Carol), "Richmond Times-Dispatch, Sunday Magazine, her 1936, p. 3.
and Fail of Man: A Kentucky Ballad-Carol, "Kentucky Folklore Record, 1 (1955), the Festival, "Richmond Times-Dispatch, 16 May 1934.
ized", Southern Literary Messenger (1929), 515-26. [short story]
if America (New York: Fischer, 1938),
"of a Folk Festival", Southern Folklore Quarterly, 1 (1937), 29-34.
ber", Southern Literary Messenger (1939), 341-46. [short story]
Melodic Structure in Anglo-American Folk Music - A Neutral Mode, in Papers
e International Congress of Musicology at New York, 11-16 September 1939, ed. by Endell, Gilbert Chase, and Gustave Reese (New York: American Musicological, 94).
Mode in Anglo-American Folk Music, "Southern Folklore Quarterly, 4 (1940), vil 1963, p. 33.
Mountains", Southern Literary Messenger (1939), 393-99, 472-78. [short story] Dawes Lure "Virginia Back", "Richmond Times-Dispatch, 13 December 1936.
 תמונה: From the Old Shape-Note Hymnbooks and From Oral Tradition, with John
I, "Charm Lure White Top's Faith", "Richmond Times-Dispatch, Sunday Magazine, 1934, pp. 6-7.

ography of items relating to Annabel Morris Buchanan and the White les about the White Top Folk Festival appeared in newspapers in Washington, ont, Nashville, St Louis, and New York, among other cities, during the months ogn from 1952 to 1956 inclusive.
fram, "The White Top Folk Festival", Journal of American Folklife, 46 rest, "Folk Music at White Top", New Republic, 30 August 1933, 74-75.

Lyn Wozl, Annabel Morris Buchanan and her folk song collection

'Folklore Is the Theme of the White Top Conference', Musical America, 56, no. 14 (1936), 14.

Hendren, Joseph, 'Review of Folk Hymns of America by Annabel Morris Buchanan', Journal of American Folklore, 53 (1940), 201-04.

Hoyt, George, 'Review of Folk Hymns of America by Annabel Morris Buchanan', Southern Folklore Quarterly, 2 (1938), 221-23.

Hickerson, Joseph C., 'A Brief List of Material Relating to the White Top Mountain Folk

Jackson, George Pullen, 'Ballad Art Revived at White Top Festival', Musical America, 54,
no. 14 (1934), 8.

Jackson, George Pullen, 'White Top Festival Keeps Folk Music Alive', Musical America, 53, nor. 14 (September 1933), 7, 30.

Jackson, George Pullen, 'The White Top Mountain Folk Festival', Musical Leaders, 8, no. 8 (1933), 6.

Le不死, Carolyn, 'Annabel Morris Buchanan: A Profile of Her Contributions to Folklife',

Luspinosio, Margaret Friske, 'The Early American Tunebooks in the Annabel Morris Buchanan Collection: Valued Heirlooms, Then As Now', Bookman (University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill), 49 (1980), 19-25.

Real Southerner', Southern Literary Messenger (1939), 404-06.

Thompson, Harold W., 'Review of Folk Hymns of America by Annabel Morris Buchanan', Diaspora, August 1938.

Trebbeholz, Ulrich, 'Music on the Mountain', Virginia Catecata, Summer 1961, 4-11.

Wall, Mabel Lee, 'Folk Music Echoes From White Top Mountain', Tempo, 1, no. 10 (1943), 21-23.

Whisnant, David E., All That Is Native & Fine: The Politics of Culture in an American Region,
The Fred W. Morrison Series in Southern Studies (Chapel Hill: University of North

Bibliography, and Guide to Sources, Folklife and Folklore in Virginia, 2 (1980-81), 38-52.

'White Top Folk Festival', Musical America, 55, no. 14 (1955), 12.

Wozl, Lyn A., "'White Top Folk Trails': Annabel Morris Buchanan's Folk Music Legacy",

Notes
1 'Real Southerner', Southern Literary Messenger (1939), 404-06.
2 For a description of some of Buchanan's collecting experiences, see her manuscript titled 'On the Trail of the Folk Song in the Virginia Mountains' (unpublished, undated), Annabel Morris Buchanan Collection 4020. Southern Historical Collection, Wilson Library, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill (hereafter cited as AMB 4020).
3 See Annabel Morris Buchanan, 'A Neutral Mode in Anglo-American Folk Music', Southern Folklore Quarterly, 4 (1940), 77-92, for further details of this system, which was strongly influenced by the theories of Anne Gilchrist and Phillips Barry. Buchanan's correspondence with her two mentors, Gilchrist and Barry, is preserved in AMB 4020 (where her own letters to them are usually included because she kept carbon copies).
Folk Song: Tradition, Revival, and Re-Creation

5 Annabel Morris Buchanan, 'Our American Folk Music', unpublished speech given at a Chamber of Commerce luncheon, San Jose, California, 21 May 1924, AMB 4020.

6 Olive Dame Campbell and Cecil J. Sharp, English Folk Songs from the Southern Appalachians, Comprising 122 Songs and Ballads, and 323 Tunes (New York: Putnam, 1917).

7 The three anecdotes that follow come, respectively, from one of Buchanan's field notebooks (AMB 4020), from her unpublished manuscript 'The Rough Was Given to Me' (AMB 4020), and from a conversation I had with Richard Chase at Ferrum College, Virginia, in September 1980.

8 For a fascinating study of the White Top Folk Festival and Buchanan's role in it, see the chapter called "This Folk Work" and the "Holy Folk": The White Top Folk Festival, 1911-1913" in David E. Whitman, All That Is Native & Fine: The Politics of Culture in an American Region, The Fred W. Morrison Series in Southern Studies (Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, 1983).

9 See, for example, Annabel Morris Buchanan to Anne Gilchrist, 2 February 1939, p. 2, AMB 4020.

10 This information comes from the Archivist's publication titled 'Major Collections of Virginia Folklore' in the Archive of Folk Song, which was compiled by Joseph C. Hickerson in 1975. Buchanan deposited the songs at the Library of Congress in the 1960s as part of the National Federation of Music Clubs' American Music Archive Project. The Archive of Folk Culture also holds a tape recording of Buchanan herself singing eighty of the songs she had collected or knew from her family's singing tradition.

The life and legacy of a New Brunswick folk song collector

MARGARET STEINER

Much of what we know about British-American folk song is the tireless work of collectors who, though without academic folklore training, were passionate for a heritage that they deemed worth preserving. Louise Mann is a remarkable among collectors — both male and female — for her success in preserving songs of songs from a region for the people of that region. She single-handedly galvanized local interest around a folk song renaissance. The ongoing legacy is the Miramichi Folksong Festival, which has grown over the past forty-five years.

Louise Mann was born on 21 February 1890 in Gilead, Maine, the youngest child of Charles DeGraff and Minette Lee Haedling Mann. At the age of twelve, she moved with her parents to Newcastle, New Brunswick, where her father managed a flouring mill that exported spoolwood—blocks of straight-grained birch — to Scottish manufacturers. She was educated at St. Mary's Academy, Newcastle, Ladies' College, Nova Scotia, and at McGill University, from which she graduated in French and English in 1913. From 1913 to 1915 she taught at Ladies' College, where, for at least part of that time, Helen Creighton was her teaching assistant. When her father became ill, Mann returned to Newcastle to become the manager of the R. Cory Clark Spoolwood Company, a business managed by her father and remained there until 1946. During this period well have had the opportunity to work in the business with woodsmen, but class did not have to go to work. She was known for her advice and management skills, and she was also known for her contacts through the business with woodsmen, but class did not have to work at the Spoolwood Company. In 1946, Mann sold insurance and began to study antique and rare books. Her interest in the history of the Miramichi. She wrote weekly newspaper column, for example, "Ships of Kent County" (1949) and "Ships of Miramichi" (1960). She was one of her friends, Lord Beavertook, the Newcastle-born British nobleman, oversaw the restoration of the Enclosure, which had been the buri, for the earliest settlers of the Miramichi. In recognition of her efforts, Beavertook purchased the old Presbyterian manse and established a library there, which is now the Glen Ar Milne Library.
Folk Song

Tradition, Revival, and Re-Creation

Edited by Ian Russell and David Atkinson

The Elphinston Institute
University of Aberdeen
2004 CONTENTS

1 Introduction
Ian Russell

2 One hundred years of the Folk-Song Society
Vic Gammon

Reviving and re-creating folk traditions

3 The Ballad Society: a forgotten chapter in the history of English ballad studies
Sigrid Rieuwert

4 The Little Song-Smith: a printed folk song anthology and its reception among Ingrian peasants, 1849–1900
Thomas A. Dubois

5 Folk song in Lithuania
Nijotė Sliažinskienė & Rimantas Sliažinskas

6 Compositional processes and the aesthetics of originality: reflections on a ballad in a twentieth-century Finnish opera
Tina K. Rammarine

7 Transformations of tradition in the Folkways Anthology
Edmund O'Reilly

8 Choosing the right folk: the appointment of 'human cultural properties' in Korea
Roald Maliangkay

9 Folk club or epic theatre: Brecht's influence on the performance practice of Ewan MacColl
Michael Verrier
Folk Song: Tradition, Revival, and Re-Creation

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Author</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr> </thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>British folk songs in popular music settings</td>
<td>Robert Burns</td>
<td>115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Ghosts of voices: English folk(-rock) musicians and the transmission of traditional music</td>
<td>Britta Sweers</td>
<td>130</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Revival: genuine or spurious?</td>
<td>David Atkinson</td>
<td>144</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Those who made it happen

The men

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Author</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr> </thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>The Telfer Manuscript: ballad and song collecting in the Northumbrian Borders</td>
<td>John Wesley Barker</td>
<td>163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>Sabine Baring-Gould and his old singing-men</td>
<td>Martin Graebe</td>
<td>175</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>Folk song and the ‘folk’: a relationship illuminated by Frank Kidson’s Traditional Tunes</td>
<td>John Francimanis</td>
<td>186</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>Roving Out. Peter Kennedy and the BBC Folk Music and Dialect Recording Scheme, 1952–1957</td>
<td>E. David Gregory</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The women

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Author</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr> </thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Lucy Etheldred Broadwood: her scholarship and ours</td>
<td>Lewis Jones</td>
<td>241</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Anne Geddes Gilchrist: an assessment of her contributions to folk song scholarship</td>
<td>Catherine A. Shioupe</td>
<td>253</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>An ‘English’ lady among Welsh folk: Ruth Herbert Lewis and the Welsh Folk-Song Society</td>
<td>E. Wyn James</td>
<td>266</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Singers

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Author</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr> </thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>Unnatura</td>
<td>Martin Lo</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>Annabel</td>
<td>Lyn Wolz</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>The life a</td>
<td>Margaret</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>A themat</td>
<td>Andrew k</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>'Mylecha</td>
<td>Fenella Ci</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27</td>
<td>The balla</td>
<td>Hogarth</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28</td>
<td>'The Bro</td>
<td>Andrew C</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29</td>
<td>'Spencer</td>
<td>Simon Fu</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30</td>
<td>Joseph Ti</td>
<td>Ruairidh</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>31</td>
<td>Bell Dun</td>
<td>Julia C. B</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>32</td>
<td>Sam Hov</td>
<td>Christoph</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>33</td>
<td>Belle Ste</td>
<td>Sheila Dc</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>34</td>
<td>A study</td>
<td>Yeonok la</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>35</td>
<td>Clyde Ci</td>
<td>Jennifer C</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>36</td>
<td>Songs from</td>
<td>Simon Hl</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Contents

22 Unnatural selection: Maud Karpeles's Newfoundland field diaries
Martin Lovelace

23 Annabel Morris Buchanan and her folk song collection
Lyn Wolz

24 The life and legacy of a New Brunswick folk song collector
Margaret Steiner

Singers and songs

25 A thematic reconsideration of the textual ancestors of 'The Bitter Withy'
Andrew King

26 'Mylecharaine': a forgotten call to nationhood
Fenella Crowe Bazin

27 The ballad singer and seller as depicted in the works of William Hogarth
Andrew C. Rouse

28 'The Brown Girl' (Child 295B): a Baring-Gould concoction?
Steve Gardham

29 'Spencer the Rover' – an old soldier?
Simon Furey

30 Joseph Taylor from Lincolnshire: a biography of a singer
Ruairidh Greig

31 Bell Duncan: 'The greatest ballad singer of all time'?
Julia C. Bishop

32 Sam Howard and the east Norfolk singing tradition, 1919–1936
Christopher Heppa

33 Belle Stewart, 'The Queen Amang the Heather' Sheila Douglas

34 A study of tongch'öje singing style in Korean narrative song, pansori
Yeonok Jang

35 Clyde Covill: reconstructing a community tradition
Jennifer C. Post

36 Songs from Under the Flightpath: environmental protest song in context
Simon Heywood