About the Authors

JILL DAVIDSON, a native of Southwest Missouri, received a Ph.D. in anthropology from the University of Missouri–Columbia in 1996. One of her special interests is folk songs and folk narratives of Native Americans and Anglo-Americans. She will teach anthropology at Missouri Southern State College in Joplin in 1996-97.

DANA EVERTS-BOEHM, who has a Ph.D. degree in folklore from Indiana University, came to the University of Missouri as a staff member of the Cultural Heritage Center in 1991. She is now Director of the Missouri Folk Arts Program, a program of the Missouri Arts Council that is administered through the Museum of Art and Archaeology at UMC.

MARY ANN FITZWILSON received a Master's degree in American history from the University of Missouri–Columbia in 1992. Recently she moved to Atlanta, Georgia, where she has begun writing her dissertation for a doctoral degree in intellectual cultural American history. She is a part-time instructor at Georgia State University and works at the Atlanta History Center.

ROSE JOHNSON is currently pursuing a Master's degree in art history and archaeology with a minor in cultural heritage studies and historic preservation at the University of Missouri–Columbia. Her special interest is vernacular architecture in the Midwest.

KAREN J. SANDERS began her education after raising a family (four daughters) and received BA and MA degrees in English from Southwest Missouri State University. Currently she composes computer-generated graphics for a firm in the metropolitan Kansas City area.

LYN WOLZ, a long-time member of the Society, is now the reference librarian at the University of Kansas Regents Center in Kansas City. She has an MA in folklore as well as an MA in library science. She is also a musician who specializes in singing traditional British and American songs and her own original songs, accompanied by her guitar, dulcimer, or autoharp.
