

Research explores doctor-patient emails

A new study by Muger V. Geana, assistant professor of journalism, and K. Allen Greiner, associate professor of family medicine at the KU Medical Center, examines email communications between doctors and patients in a primary care setting, finding how often they communicate, what topics they discuss and more.

The results of patent protection

Results of a new study by researchers from the University of Kansas and University of California-Irvine suggest that greater amounts of innovation, productivity and social wealth may occur when infringers are simply required to pay damages for illegally using an invention rather than prohibited altogether from using it.
